Agenda & Format

The summer school will take place in English and feature a mix of lectures and panel debates. Significant time will be allocated in every session for participants to ask questions and engage in group discussion.

Participants

The summer school is primarily designed for leading development professionals and ICT policy experts from governments, multilaterals, think tanks, NGOs, foundations, companies, and universities interested in the role of creative innovation for development. It will be limited to a maximum of 30 participants.

Costs

The workshop fee is €500 and includes the cost of lunches, coffee breaks, a reception, and workshop materials. All other costs are the responsibility of the participant, including travel and hotel. IBEI has organized a discounted group rate at a nearby hotel for participants requiring accommodation.

Registration

For registration and payment in the summer school, please complete the application form at the IBEI website (www.ibeio.org).

Grants

Supported by our sponsors, we are offering a small number of bursaries for participants, comprising a registration fee waiver. Requests for this assistance should be sent to the summer school organizers at summer@ibeio.org with a brief statement of reasons for seeking support no later than 10 July 2014.
